. . . is produced, collected,

It must be managed!!

So many backup/restore apps...
So little time to research them!

Another app successfully backs up SMS/MMS texts to a label in a designated Gmail account, saving everything to an e-mail format. Everything is readable, but this app can restore to the device only the SMS messages.

The Lessons...in a nutshell

For FOIA/discovery: Research the proposed software to confirm that all relevant records (including images) are captured, the non-records can be separated, and what is subject to a records request/discovery is deliverable in a readable format.

For Backup/Restore: If required, confirm that what is backed up to a remote service can be restored to the device in the same format.

Mobile Device Management

Sample requirements for SMS/MMS management via a service

The service provider:

Acknowledges that public records created or collected through mobile devices and the administration of mobile devices are subject to the Virginia Public Records Act (VPRA) § 42.1-76 et. seq., and are the property of the Commonwealth.

Must facilitate the ability of device users and administrators to comply with the VPRA and records retention schedules.

Must provide capability for the user to identify, backup, and export records, including metadata, created or collected in the use of mobile devices.

Must provide a method to retain, per appropriate retention schedules, records (e.g., text-messages, photographs), including metadata (e.g., to/from names, phone numbers, send date/time, content of message) created or collected in the use of mobile devices.

Library of Virginia's "Statement on the use of text messaging and private e-mail"

The use of personal e-mail accounts by state and local government personnel, whether elected, appointed, or employed, to conduct the people's business is not recommended. Whenever a government office does not have control of its records it does not have the ability to maintain or provide access to those records. The Library of Virginia strongly encourages all public officials to use official government e-mail accounts for public business and refrain from conducting government business by text messaging.
